

Any eligible building and construction work you do in another state or territory can be combined with your NSW service when applying for a payment only. If you move interstate you should follow the steps below or phone our Helpline on 13 14 41 for further advice.

What should I do if I move interstate?

You should contact the scheme operating in the State/Territory to which you move. They will advise you on your eligibility in their State/Territory and how to register if applicable. Once you are registered, you can commence recording service in that State/Territory.

You should also advise the other schemes in which you are registered of your change of address and about your interstate registration. Each State or Territory in which you are registered can then continue to send you a separate statement on your service record with that scheme and advise you of any relevant important information.

What should I do if I work in more than one State?

You should register in all States/Territories in which you perform building and construction work, so your service can be recorded with the respective schemes. You should advise each scheme of your registration with the other schemes.

In which State do I apply for long service?

You would normally apply to the scheme in the State or Territory in which your last service is recorded. However, any of the schemes can advise you what to do.

Your long service benefit will be based on the provisions operating in the State or Territory in which you are eligible to apply.
